

BOMBAY BLOOD GROUP

The Bombay blood group (Oh) was discovered in Bombay. This is a rare blood type and if the recipient is not given the same Bombay blood group blood, it can lead to transfusion reaction, which can be fatal. There may be only few thousands of Bombay blood types across the country.

Remember, someone, somewhere may have what blood type you need and only that person may be able to give you the same. Rare blood can be sent anywhere across the globe to save a life. It is important that you know your blood type and be prepared to donate your blood for the benefit of others as well as for yourself. Your blood can be frozen to be used later on for your own medical treatment or surgeries in case of need.

HELPING YOURSELF

Get to know your blood group and if you fall in the category of rare blood type, put your name on the list of rare blood registry. Several licensed organizations such as private blood banks, Indian Red Cross Society, Rotary blood bank, Lions blood bank and research foundation, non-governmental international organizations and International Federation of Blood Donor Organisations (IFBDO) etc have a registry of rare group blood donors. Blood storage in every case of rare blood is advised. The Frozen Autologous Blood Reserve Service freezes blood that patients with rare blood types donate for their own surgeries. Registry websites of rare blood group donors is available online too. The websites aim at creating awareness about voluntary blood donations. So if you happen to be amongst those with rare blood groups, donate blood as often as you can.
